

Ready To Hire In Tough Economy

MetroNews - Staff - Bridgeport - 01/14/2009

A Harrison County company specializing in software development will soon add another 80 to 100 jobs to fulfill a long-term contract.

"It's great work to work on what I think are some of the most important systems used in protecting our country," Adam Rossi, President of Platinum Solutions told MetroNews Wednesday a day after governor's office released the new jobs information.

Rossi says the contract includes a bit of a veil to satisfy the client and the secure aspects of the project. However, Platinum has a history of software development for military and security applications. They also specialize in biotech software and pharmaceutical security.

Their latest project will create about 100 high paying, high tech jobs.

"Software developers, software engineers, software testers, the q-a people to insure it's bug free," said Rossi. "It's just a full spectrum of people right out of college with either an engineering, mathematics, and computer science degree all the way to those with years of experience in the industry or with software management or software architecture."

Platinum has already hired 20 people and has about 80 positions to fill in the next three to four months. Resumes can be submitted at www.platinumsolutions.com.
